

Religion vs. Morality

Faith
Afterlife
Humility
Martyrdom
Prostration
Hypocrisy
Serve God
Sacrifice
Obedience

Reason
Reality
Pride
Self-Interest
Self-Assertion
Honesty
Pursue Happiness
Productivity
Independence

U of M Students of Objectivism is pleased to present:

Religion vs. Morality by Dr. Andrew Bernstein

Date:

Monday, April 10 2006

Time:

8:00 p.m.

Location:

Angell Hall, Auditorium D

Website: www.umso.org

Conventionally, most people believe that morality can only be based in religious faith - that in a world without God no principles of right and wrong could exist. Related to this, philosophers have long held that no objective, fact-based, rational code of values is possible.

Regarding both points, this talk shows that the exact opposite is true. The purpose of morality is to guide human life on earth - and religion is utterly incapable of it. Flourishing life requires a code of secularism, rationality, egoism and freedom. Religious faith clashes with every principle of a proper moral code, and, as such, has led, and can only lead to, hell on earth.